By the way, who is guilty of changing that tree from the McLain to Crecently? Them thar trees is valuable, and still on private property.

All due, we are amazed and shocked to no end. Our local school paper relates this week that a debate was held by the "Robert E. Literary society as to whether or not the South had a right to secede in 1860, and believe it or not, the affirmative (U.D.C.) the negative won! The South is getting refined.

We have never found a suitable and satisfactory procedure to eat a sandwich.

We understand that 50 new high school pupils are to be added to Virginia's list before 1200 have asked to be appointed.

Mr. Chick recalls that when he was in the Civil Service examination for mail carrier, the law required as many as three to take examination and there was such competition he had to stir interest to get two others to come. Times have changed. Saturday no less than 87 are taking the examination for two vacancies.

The Mayor Is Silent

Two weeks ago, the editor of the Times Virginian was approached by a prominent citizen of our town in regards to the apparent failure of the proposed sewerage project.

While like projects are being announced for scores of other towns, almost daily ours seemed to have struck a snag. It was something in which all of were vitally interested and for which all citizens seemed willing to get together and work for. It was suggested that a mass meeting might develop fruitful suggestions, and at least inform the citizens of the status of the project. Accordingly, we were duly entitled to have.

We therefore, prepared a front page editorial asking the mayor to call such a mass meeting. Before it was published, we did the FAIR THING and showed the article to the mayor. He read same in our presence and gave it his endorsement and agreed to call the meeting in question. With this assurance, we published the editorial. Many citizens expressed their approval.

However, when last week's paper went to press, His Honor was out of town. Not wishing to comment during his absence, though every day was valuable if the project was to be followed up, we published a brief article stating that the entire matter would rest until the mayor returned.

He has now been back a week . . . yet has maintained a profound silence. So, to-day we ask: Why this change of attitude? Why did the mayor agree to call a mass meeting and inform the citizens of the status of the sewerage project and then change his mind?

We have no desire other than to promote the progress of our community. If the mayor thinks he can handle the project better than could all of the citizens working together, that is his right. However we happen to know that many of our citizens are interested in knowing the status of the project and what can be done to advance its prospects,

Leaf Marts Close March 16

Tobacco markets are slated to close on March 26. This gives growers one more week in which to sell this year's crop. The sales within the past week have netted around a nine cent average, consisting chiefly of the lower grades.

In the meantime farmers are turning their attention to crop plans for the coming, with the farm experts predicting a 15 per cent increase in acreage. With the AAA gone and a general increase in production, it is obvious that lower prices will result. Farmers are urged to go in for crop diversification and efforts to boost the quality of the leaf produced in order to offset the price drop which always follows over-production.

CIRCUIT COURT

The circuit court of this county will convene here April 1. Many civil and criminal matters have accumulated for hearing.

WITNESS TELLS OF NAPOLEON'S BURIAL

St. Helena Rites Described in Letter to Mother.

London.—Among the 1,500 British troops who assisted at the burial of Napoleon at St. Helena, May 9, 1821, was Lieut. Duncan Darroch, of the Twentieth Foot. The day after the ceremony he wrote his mother an account of it. Napoleon had died May 5, and his body remained in its island tomb until 1840, when, by direction of King Louis Phillippe, it was conveyed to Paris and placed in a magnificent sarcophagus under the dome of the Hotel des Invalides.

Lieutenant Darroch's letter has been published for the first time in The Sunday Times, of London. The Sir Hudson mentioned in the letter, which is reprinted here, was Sir Hudson Lowe, who had been governor of St. Helena since 1816, shortly after Napoleon was interned there. The letter read:

"We yesterday interred the remains of Napoleon Bonaparte with military honors. The funeral I will describe to best I can.

"In the first place, you must understand the figure of the ground near Longwood. The island (generally speaking) is composed of high and narrow diverging ridges of hills running, or rather diverging from Diana's Peak toward the coast, where they terminate abruptly in tremendous precipices: the valleys between these are very deep.

Chosen by Napoleon.

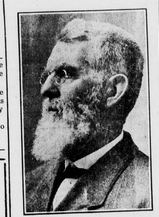
"Longwood is situated on one of these ridges, and the place Nap chose for his body to lie in was in the valley between that and James' valley, where the town is, and which, from its circular form, is called (at least near the head of it) the Devil's Punch Bowl, the rear line to the sea is called Rupert's valley.

"The troops, of which there were about 1,000, were formed from Longwood Guard house on the bank above the road to succession, by seventy-Twentieth Marines, Sixty-sixth St. Helena Artillery Regiment and Volunteers; on the left eleven guns of the Royal artillery as the firing party. We were in open order, resting on our arms reversed. Bands playing the dirge.

"After a little while the procession appeared through the gate. First came the priest and Henry Bertrand, carrying the censer, after these, Doctor Arnott and the French doctor, next the undertakers, and then the body.

"The body of his own carriage had been taken off, and something like an open hearse put in its place. He was drawn by four of his own horses with postillions in his imperial livery. There was a plain mahogany coffin, and instead of a pall his cloak was thrown over it. On the top was a large book with his sword lying on it.

92 March 24



Mr. Daniel P. Ferguson, veteran of the War Between the States, and one of Appomattox's oldest citizens, will be 92 years of age on Tuesday March 24. Greetings and congratulations, Mr. Ferguson.
